Course Description

The Medical Priority Dispatch System is a unified system used to dispatch appropriate aid to medical emergencies including systematized caller interrogation and pre-arrival instructions. This training establishes a universal standard for emergency dispatchers taking calls for a broad range of field and triage response—which may include drowning, stabbing, gunshot wounds, and much more—all while the first responders are enroute.

Tested over hundreds of millions of calls since 1979, MPDS includes 36 protocols that are continually updated as per recommendations and research made by top medical professionals and associations.

Each student is required to bring a laptop to this class.
