Course Description

The number of violent crimes is growing at an alarming rate and society is demanding increased prosecution of these offenders. Understanding the nature of these predators is imperative to maintaining public safety and successfully capturing and prosecuting these criminals.

The problem of violent predators, however, is one that must be addressed in a unique manner by law enforcement. Violent predators can occur almost anywhere—they reside in all areas of our state and exist in all occupations. However, they are not all alike. The psychological organization of the criminal mind can, and does, determine victim selection, violence level of the crime, and most productive strategy towards apprehension.

This workshop is designed to provide the participant with the skills to more fully understand the motives; psychological profiles; and inadequacies of the deviant, twisted, and violent minds of America's most dangerous criminals. It has been designed to address the issues of the psychological structure of various kinds of criminals and to assist attendees in more fully understanding the complicated human condition of a predatory criminal mind.
